It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTION¹

WE know far too little of social life in Scotland during those days when modern conditions were a-making. No wonder the simple annals of the poor, or even the sordid chronicle of burgher money-making, shows only blank pages except under the modern search-light of realistic fiction. But some voice might have spoken from the baronial mansions where alone cultured intercourse was possible, at least during the eighteenth century, when wit found an audience everywhere and elegance a vogue. Modern social writers, indeed, have composed for our diversion, not enlightenment, sketches filled in with such Rembrandtesque shadows of dirt and debauch as prove the superiority of the modern superior person. How our nearer forefathers themselves figured as verbal artists of character and thought, their own or that of others, few letters or memoirs tell us. The standard of living and the economy of the households have been but partially disclosed in default of contemporary material. For eighteenth century ‘gentility’ was abhorrent of personal portraiture as savouring of vulgar impertinence. The grand style was the only mode, but even of that we have not much to show. All the more to be prized, therefore, is such a veritable human document as is still preserved at Ochtertyre, in Strathearn, and generously placed at the disposal of the Scottish History Society by the owner, Sir Patrick Keith Murray, Bart. The fact that such a manuscript existed among the Ochtertyre Papers is alluded to, in passing, in the Hist. MSS. Comm. Reports, but I am not aware of any other reference having ever been made to the document. The Commissioners have garnered mainly from the field of politics, and thus have often overlooked many such 'unconsidered trifles' as the House Booke. These are the 'human documents' which serve to throw on the social life of the past that undesigned light which illuminates the nation's story with colour and interest.

This document is entitled 'The House Booke of Accomps begun January the 1: 1737.' It is a goodly folio, written in that neat, clean hand which we owed to our close intercourse with Holland, and in excellent preservation but for the removal of a few leaves at the end. The record is dated from Fowlls¹ regularly from day to day till the middle of September 1737, when the family remove to Ochtertyre, is resumed at Fowlls with the new year, and again dated at Ochtertyre at the end of October 1738. About the middle of February 1739, the record ends abruptly at Ochtertyre.

The baronial family of the Murrays of Ochtertyre has the rare distinction of showing an unbroken descent in the male line from the fifteenth century, a William alternating almost regularly with a Patrick. The founder was a Moray of the house of Tullibardine (d. 1476). They played a baron's part, for a Patrick, a grandson of the founder, fell at Flodden; a William (second baronet), again, was taken prisoner by Argyll at Shirramuir; and yet another (fourth baronet) was captured at Prestonpans. Their ancestral home was, and is, Ochtertyre, but the House Booke concerns itself more with the family doings at Fowlls Easter, so called to distinguish it from Fowlls Wester, in the neighbourhood of Crieff. It was William,¹ created first baronet in 1673, who acquired Fowlls from its ancient possessors, the Grays, of whom more anon, in the year 1667. Patrick, the second baronet (1656-1735), lived much at Fowlls. He executed (1726) a singular deed of entail, to the effect that no heir was to take a title above baronet under forfeiture of his inheritance. In the Harley Papers (Hist. MSS. Comm. Reports) there is a kindly reference to him. Harley's son, the second Earl of Oxford, on a visit to his sister, Countess of Kinnoull, at Dupplin (1725), tells how, on the homeward journey, he forded the 'Arne in company with the Laird of Auchtertire, an elderly, worthy gentleman of sixty-nine, who lives about fourteen miles off.' There was no bridge then over the Earn at Gask, on the high road to Perth. This kindly interest of the Kinnoull family in the old gentleman must have been in recognition of what he had done for the unfortunate tenantry, burnt out of their poor clachans by the heartless order of Mar in his march on Dunblane (1715). The laird is said to have spent large sums on this Christian object. As he had married (1681) a daughter of Mungo Haldane of Gleneagles, he must have felt himself bound by kindly ties to the Auchterarder district. His eldest son and heir, a William, did not long enjoy the title (1735-39). He married a daughter of the Lord Lovat who was cousin to the notorious Simon Fraser of the '45. The House Booke ends in February of 1739. It is his establishment that is there chronicled. Under December 25, 1738, when the family is resident at Ochtertyre, we have the entry: 'Goose from Fowlls and sent 2 to my Lady Lovat.' This lady, the Baroness Lovat, was the laird's mother-in-law. In all probability she was then staying at Drummond Castle, not far off. The two families—Drummond and Fraser—were connected by marriage. In one of the letters¹ of Simon Fraser, he tells how, on his journey south (September 1740), he had rested at Drummond Castle. Continuing his journey next day, he narrates the discomforts of a break-down of the frail family coach on the dreary moor of Ardoch, on his way to Stirling.

Sir William, the third baronet, died in 1739, leaving a debt of £20,000, a fact which may have had some bearing on the expenditure of the household. He was an accomplished scholar, and had travelled in France and Italy. In February 1737 the House Booke notes: 'letter to Sir W^m', and again, 'to my Lady.' This is repeated during the following months of March, April, May, June, and July. These letters generally came by messenger from Dundee, charge 2d. a letter, the family being then at Fowlls. His successor, Sir Patrick, fourth baronet, like many of his class in those days, served as an officer in the Royal army. His commission as Captain in Lord Sempill's Highland Regiment of Foot was dated December 1744. Taken prisoner at Prestonpans, he retired on parole to Ochtertyre, where he remained till released by Cumberland's march to the north. His son and successor, Sir William (1746-1800), built the present house of Ochtertyre near the close of his life. He, and still more his son, belonged to the noble band of enlightened, improving lairds to whom Scotland owes so much. His son, Sir Patrick (succeeded 1800), had much to do with the making of the fine roads and bridges in Strathearn and creating those charms of wood and water around Crieff, in which the present baronet so generously allows the public to share. It was in the old house (a part of it still stands) to the north and higher up the hill than the modern mansion, where Burns halted on his Highland tour. Here, he says, 'I lived, Sir William's guest, for two or three weeks, and was much flattered by my hospitable reception. . . . I find myself very comfortable here, neither oppressed by ceremony nor mortified by neglect' (October 15, 1787). He enjoyed a walk up the romantic Turrit glen in the company of two of the laird's sons, and a cousin, Euphemia Murray of Lintrose, the 'Flower of Strathmore.' To this double inspiration we owe the piece on the Water-fowl in Loch Turrit, and the song,

'Blythe, blythe and merry was she.'

It will be well to visualise the district in which the old house of Fowlls was situated. From the hill of Balgay, now the west-end park of Dundee, a ridge of moderately lofty ground stretches in a general north-westerly direction under the name of the Braes of Gowrie. At its western end this district blends with the foot-hills of the Sidlaws as they abut on the Tay in the hill of Kinnoull, just outside of Perth. Within this upland bow lies the fertile Carse of Gowrie along the reedy marge of the great estuary. All this southern slope is dotted over with craggy knolls and fair woods that hide in their recesses the brattling linns and burns that are hurrying to the Tay. Over the ridge to north lies Strathmartin, where the Dichty, gathering its waters from the slopes of Dunsinane and Blacklaw in the Sidlaws, and increasing volume from the lochs of Lundie, parish adjoining Fowlis, flows eastward to the mouth of Tay at Monifieth. Down the southern slope of the Braes streamlets hurry across the Carse to the bay of Invergowrie, a few miles west of Dundee. By way of the ferry here must the messenger have been despatched to Edinburgh, bearing his ‘compliment’ of Gowrie mutton. Walking up the burnside from the Perth road, one passes near to four spots of interest to us—Camperdown, Gray, Fowlis, Lundie, and, farther west towards Perth, Kinnaird. To eastward again, about six miles from Fowlis, and so far down the Dichty valley as to bring one well to north of Dundee, lay the Fintry of the record, with which the closest connection was maintained. Tracing upwards here the northern feeders of the Dichty, a short walk brings us to Tealing, also in the record. Far across the Sidlaws, in the Strathmore parish of Kettins, lay Lintrose, seat of Sir Mungo Murray, closely related to the Fowlis family. Within this little world, extending from Dundee and Fintry on the east to Perth and Ochtertyre on the west, and from Lintrose on the north to Edinburgh, far to south, was confined the human interest of the family as revealed in the House Booke.

The parishes of Lundie and Fowlis were united in 1618. The former is in Forfar, the latter in Perth. The church, originally planted near to the old castle of Fowlis, is one of the very few pre-Reformation survivals, and has had the good fortune to have been happily restored in recent times so as to bring out its unique features. It was built by the first Lord Gray in the fifteenth century. As the place where the family of Fowlis worshipped, and where many of its members lie, it has an interest, but otherwise it plays no part in the record. For centuries the Grays were a leading family in Gowrie, Fowlis Castle being one of their most ancient seats. The Reformation period was a troublous one for the Grays, the Cromwellian régime no less. So impoverished was the ninth lord by fines on himself and his relatives that, in 1667, he parted with Fowlis to the Perthshire Murrays. Long before this date, however, the connection of the Grays with their castle of Fowlis was but a slight one. In the earlier and more famous days of the Gray family Fowlis Castle was the seat of a barony of great extent. This castle must have been for the time a place of strength, but of the original structure little now survives. Fowlis formed but a portion of the wide possessions of the Grays in Gowrie. On leaving Fowlis in 1667 they retired to Nethertown, marked on an old map¹ as situated a little to the east of the modern House of Gray, which is said to have been built 1714-16. Here the Grays must have been the nearest neighbours of the Murrays, and therefore figure largely in the interchange of 'compliments' in the record. The house must have been far the grandest in Gowrie at that time. From the design of the famous brothers Adam, its imposing pavilion front looked, in its fresh glory, south over a broad lawn. A very long and well-grown avenue of trees now leads up to the house. This Baron Gray who built it shared in that great refining movement, then scarce begun, to which the Carse was to owe, at a somewhat later date, the magnificence of Rossie Priory, a little to the west, and the more modern Kinfauns, built in 1822 by Francis, Lord Gray, on a singularly picturesque site on the slope of Kinnoull Hill. A friend, complimenting the enlightened builder of the House of Gray on the happy transformation he had effected on the district, remarked that he would leave nothing to his heirs to do. ‘Oh yes,’ was the response, ‘something to pay.’

The house of Fowlis, neglected after the rise of the new Ochtertyre, stands near the top of a bank that slopes towards the northern end of a romantic and thickly-wooded den. In this sheltered hollow below the castle bank must have lain the kitchen garden which contributed so largely to the baronial table. The prospect from the house was even then a noble one. The hill of Balgay shut out Dundee on the east, the hill of Kinnoull barred the view of Perth on the west, and with both towns the record has dealings. Screened from the north by the shoulders of the Sidlaws, the Braes of Gowrie looked south from it over the fertile Carse and the sunlit estuary to the shores of Fife, and the peak of Norman’s Law, rising high on the blue horizon, as clean-cut and graceful in outline then as now. The twin Lomonds formed a striking background. It was but a modern baron’s house, built by the eighth Lord Gray, and known as the Lady’s Tower on an old plan.¹ Rising to four stories, it measured over all only forty feet from east to west, and twenty-three from north to south. On its northern side there is a low modern wing. The feature of the main front is a chimney, forming as it were an ornamental buttress from base to sky-line. The main entrance, in the east gable, passes through the great kitchen, where the appetising menus of the record were ‘bodied forth,’ to the foot of the grand staircase, conspicuous, from the outside, as the Lady’s Tower, rising in elegant lines alongside the buttress-chimney and terminating in a conical cap. These two, with the dormer windows and the corbie gables, give interest to what would otherwise be a somewhat commonplace structure. No wonder that, with the material progress of the eighteenth century, the family outgrew its modest ménage. The minister, in the Statistical Account (1793), says that the whole parish of Fowlls belongs to Auchtertyre, rental above £1000. Though the great agricultural progress of the century intervened between this date and that of the House Booke, the earlier income must, relatively, have served to support a baronial style in keeping with the time. ✓The dowager Lady, hostess of the House Booke, lived at Fowlls till her death in 1771. After the house had been abandoned for the new Ochtertyre, it rapidly came down in the world. The date 1862, on a stone built into the west gable, marks the last reconstruction. The kitchen is now a bothy, its great open fireplace and adjoining oven much altered. Its wide doorway no longer gives access to the turret stair. In the angle at the foot of the stair is a new doorway, giving access to the families that now occupy the upper part of the house. The turnpike is of the narrow, perpendicular type common in old Edinburgh. Where the ample skirts of the grand dames filled up the fairway, the humble 'short-gown' now brushes the newel. The hall, with its outlook on three sides, must have occupied the entire first floor. It requires almost as great a stretch of imagination to people the simple peel-house with the laird and his lady, their nineteen children, and all the comings and goings of 'couthie neebors' as it would have been for one of them to dream of seeing from the window, as now, the mighty bridge in its grand sweep from Wormit Bay to the northern shore at Dundee.¹

✓Fintry bulks so largely in the record that some notice must be taken of it. A branch of the Perthshire Grahams settled here in the sixteenth century and built the imposing castle known as Mains of Fintry, naming it from Fintry up among

xviii OCHTERTYRE HOUSE BOOKE OF ACCOMPS

the Campsie Hills. A younger and contemporary branch of the same family is better known as the Grahams of Claverhouse, in the immediate neighbourhood of the Mains of Fintry. The keystone of the western gateway bears the date 1562, while on a stone above the doorway there are the letters D. G. for Sir David Graham. The castle lies low, on the banks of a feeder of the Dichty, and about three miles north-east from Dundee. The ground to the south rises rapidly, so that the lower story, to afford a view, has been carried up to an unusual height. The massive proportions of the central tower, flanked by an embattled screen wall and courtyard, through which the main entrance passes, and terminating in a corbelled table, must have formed a striking contrast to the humbler mansion of Fowlls. In 1780 the estate passed to an Edinburgh lawyer, Erskine of Linlathen, father of a notable religious writer who was the well-known friend of Carlyle. Thereafter the name was merged in that of Linlathen, the adjoining property.

It is possible to follow the family as it kept Fowlls in touch with Ochtertyre. Of course these were not the days of wheel traffic. The horse would pick its way from clachan to clachan as best it might avoid stumbling on the cobble stones or being ‘laird’ in the miry holes. Even the later post-road by the base of Kinnoull must have still been in a state of nature. The direct route would most probably keep the higher ground in travelling from Fowlls, passing behind Kinnoull and so dropping down on the kirk-road that still leads one to the old graveyard within the great park of Scone Palace. As the Tay was not bridged as now at Perth till 1771, travellers ferrying across had to encounter the notoriously troublesome boatmen. The alternative route by Scone led past the ruined palace to what must have been the ‘bullions boat’¹ of the record (p. 81). Here a ferry-boat still regularly crosses the Tay just beside the old battlefield of Luncarty on the right bank. Pennant, on tour, tells us that he crossed the Tay on a temporary bridge (1769, present one building), visited Scone, and repassed the Tay at Bullion's Boat, then visited the battlefield of Luncarty.

A more nearly contemporary reference to this ferry-boat is that in the diary of the young Earl of Oxford (1725), already referred to. Paying a visit to Scone from Dupplin, he says, 'about 9 rode out with my Lord [Kinnoull], and the Laird of Auchtertire. We left Huntingtower, seat of the Duke of Atholl on the right hand,' which would bring him to Bullion's Boat. Onwards to Ochtertyre the Fowlls party might either follow the Almond to Buchanty and the Sma' Glen and then down the Shaggie, and so reach Ochtertyre direct; or take the south side of the ridge between Almond and Earn and pass through Methven. Conjecture here can be checked by an entry (p. 81) in which one of these autumn fittings to Ochtertyre is briefly outlined. On Monday, 19th September 1737, the party had left Fowlls and passed the night in Perth. A messenger meanwhile had held on straight to Ochtertyre ('for a man to bullions boate, 8d.'). On Tuesday the journey is resumed ('for horse haire from Perth, 2s. 4d.'). The boy—or gillie, we should now say—who in those days stalked by the horse's head, bare-legged and shock-headed, halter in one hand, long staff in the other for unsteady footing, stayed over the two nights at Perth at the moderate cost of one shilling. When the family move again to Foules, on 24th December, they take with them '3 pieces of beefe from Ochtertyre' (p. 113).¹ Under the circumstances the bill of fare for that day is the briefest possible.

It is difficult even to conjecture who made up this book. Twice a personal note occurs: 'January, 1738, for my horse three nights at Perth, 2s.'; 'October 21, 1738, for the Expence of the lads and myself coming to Ochtertyre, 2s. 6d.'—evidently referring to the usual migration of the family from Fowlls. The ‘lads’ here may have been serving-men on the establishment. No housekeeper could speak thus, even were it possible then to find a female of that class, or considerably above it, capable of such a business-like piece of work. The ‘breviate’ showing the ‘summa’ of cash actually expended weekly, and of supplies received, is entered in a style superior to that of the erratic caligraphy and still more erratic spelling of the menu. Dr. Hay Fleming discovered initials on an inner margin (apparently C G M or b G M) that might well have been those of a member of the family responsible for the record. It may here be observed that the ‘spent’ of the right-hand column refers not to ‘moneys’ expended, but to portions given out from the ‘spence’ or larder. But in those days there was in most great houses a Dominie Sampson, who, as Levite, tutor or chamberlain, lived such a life of genteel expectancy as the only road to a kirk or a school. To the family there is, of course, only indirect reference. The laird seems not to have lived at Fowlls during 1737, for there are then notes of letters to him (postage 2d.) on five different occasions. His presence at Fowlls is recorded, June 5, 1738 (p. 165). Only twice does ‘my lady’ get a letter. In all, postage is paid on about fifty letters over the whole period. They are most frequent during the autumn of 1738, which fact, coupled with more elaborate menus, seems to hint at a sort of shooting season of heightened social intercourse. A letter from Holland costs 1s. 6d., perhaps from Sir William on his travels (p. 73). Another, ‘for Mr. Murray, 4d., Ap. 15, 1737,’ may refer to the young laird, then at Fowlls. ‘For my ladyes use, 4s.’ (p. 40) is an odd entry. She is also credited with the value of the skin of a sheep that had been killed, perhaps her perquisite. ‘Miss Ann’s shooes 5s. 6d., Jan. 1737,’ is another family note.

A kindly custom of those days enables us to at least outline a social background to the family. An entry in June 1737 explains—‘Received 33 wildfowl from the hills, sent away

18 of them in compliments.' These gifts were generally of food, and point to the absence of luxuries or of the convenient purchase of them. They served to keep alive, in those clannish days, the proverb—'Giff-gaff maks good freens.' With Dundee the household seems to have been in close touch. Gifts are sent of a quarter of salmon to Mrs. Warder and a shoulder of mutton to Mrs. Fleeming, friends there. From Lundie, a little higher up on the Sidlaws, comes the gift of '13 Eells' (p. 159), doubtless from laird Duncan of Lundie, for whom two letters are paid later on. The Duncans shared with the Murrays the entire lands of the united parishes of Lundie and Fowlis. Isobel, a sister of the laird, had married Duncan of Lundie. Across the Sidlaws, and not far from Coupar-Angus, is the house of Lintrose, credited with a gift of but two moorfowl. Here lived John Murray, who in 1735 had married the daughter of the laird of Fowlis. They were cousins, for John Murray was son of Sir Mungo Murray, the laird's uncle. Perth was more accessible during the Ochtertyre stay, when it is much in evidence, mainly for gifts of salmon from a Mrs. Hickson. In 1735 another daughter of the house was married to Graham of Fintry. From Fintry come very frequently pigeons and trout, both fresh and fried. Carriage for the laird was not costly in those days—it could be exacted as feudal service—to judge from the entry: 'received a hinde quarter of beef' (it weighed over 5st.) 'from fentry to the man that came, 6d.,' which was the usual gratuity on these occasions. More remarkable is the fact that from Fowlis a sheep, and on other occasions half a sheep, are sent to Edinburgh, doubtless with the help of the ferryboat across Tay. At Ochtertyre, in addition to exchanges at odd times, with such neighbours as Abercairney, Lawers, Glenalmond, and Amulree, we have note of a goose from Fowlis, and two sent to my Lady Lovat's, probably then staying at Drummond Castle. But of all the friends of the family, the most frequently mentioned are, at Fowls, Lord Gray of Gray, and at Ochtertyre, a certain Brigadier Camble. His lordship gets beef, veal, and a pig, and sends liberally pigeons, partridges, and trout.

xxii OCHTERTYRE HOUSE BOOKE OF ACCOMPS

The Brigadier deserves more than a passing mention. He was nearest neighbour when the family were living at Ochtertyre, and familiarly entered here as Camble, phonetically, after the local pronunciation of 'Campbell.' From him, when on active service, Sir John Clerk of Penicuik leased Lawers for the summer sport, which he describes in his Diary. Through the courtesy of the Right Honourable Mr. Haldane, Secretary for War, I have been favoured with the following interesting record of his military career. Mr. Haldane has himself an interest in the House Booke, for the laird's mother was a daughter of Mungo Haldane of Gleneagles, the ancestral home of the family, which looks down from the Ochils upon lower Strathearn.

The Honourable James Campbell of Lawers was the youngest son of James, second Earl of Loudoun. He served in the army in the reign of King William III., and in February 1702 was appointed Captain in the Royal Regiment of North British Dragoons (Scots Greys.) He accompanied his regiment to Holland in 1702, and served under the Duke of Marlborough. Promoted Lieut.-Colonel commanding the Scots Greys on 24th August 1706. Served with distinction at the battles of Oudenarde and Malplaquet. Brevet-Colonel 15th November 1711. King George I. conferred the colonelcy of the 9th Foot on Colonel Campbell in 1715, and in 1717 that of the Scots Greys. Brigadier-General 15th November 1735. Major-General 2nd July 1739. Lieut.-General 18th February 1742. Placed on the Staff of the army which proceeded to Flanders in 1742. In 1743 he served in Germany, and greatly distinguished himself at the battle of Dettingen, for which he was created K.B. Commanded the British Horse at Fontenoy, until a shot carried away his leg, from the effects of which he died shortly afterwards.

Battle of Dettingen. ‘. . . James Campbell at the head of his Greys put them out of this sullen humour and made them take to their old rout again. Things grew confused, and our dragoons pursued and made dreadful slaughter. . . . The Greys have escaped best, though they took most pains to be demolished.’ (Field Officer’s letter, published in July 1743.)

‘The Scots Greys began, and all the English showed the allies the part of men.

‘Lt.-Gen. Campbell pursued with the Greys, and about three thousand horse, and made great havock.’ (Gentleman’s Magazine, June 1743.)

The homely entries against the Brigadier’s name in the House Booke afford a pleasing contrast to this ‘drum and trumpet’ page of his history. Substantial ‘compliments’ in the shape of ‘sides of beefe’ are exchanged. From Lawers come (18th Oct., p. 91) ‘some mussels,’ doubtless got from the Earn near by. Out of two hundred and sixty Tay sparlings sent from Mrs. Hickson, one hundred go to Lawers (p. 105; see also pp. 224-5).

Such an account-book as this ought to exhibit the general economy of the household, but here the bookkeeper seems to have been charged only with the kitchen department and the food-supply. This accounts for such items as ‘small cord, pack-thread and twine, wooden pudding pans, ladles, ranges (of heather, for rinsing pots), an earthenware pan, a filler (for sausages), a grater, little racks and a speat (for roasts at the great kitchen fire), a sieve and a search (colander), kitchen knives, glew and rosit (resin).’ Kitchen paper forms a frequent charge (3d. a quire), pointing to an unexpected degree of refinement in the mode of presenting dishes at table. Such essentials as light and fuel are barely noticed. We have 2s. 10d. for a ‘lantron,’ while candles, from a pound to a stone, often appear, and this even in the height of summer. The sole mention of fuel is ‘a coal riddle, 4d.’ (p. 139). Baking and brewing must have been done at home, to judge from the regular supplies of barm (yeast), and 'barm for the wort.' There are few purchases of bread in 1737, but they are frequent later on, as 'loves (loaves), rolls, biscuits, bakes, and nackits,' the last, perhaps, a biscuit with a nicked edge. Now and again a peck of 'flower' is bought, probably for puddings. A 'scraper for the baking table' occurs (p. 47). Scarcely any wheat was raised in Scotland then, but it must have been known at Fowlis, if the charge of 2d. 'for grinding the white' be evidence. 'Butterd white,' again, occurs as a dish. In this connection (p. 30) there is the record of a lost art—'a boll barley making, 2s' (p. 141), —no other than the weary process of husking barley for the pot in the 'knockin-stane.' The art of home brewing was in common use. 'Hoaps' is a regular charge, and under labour we read, 'to the cooper for girding and repairing the brew-house tubs' (p. 189). In the kitchen is charged 'a stoup for servants' ale' (p. 8). Though corks are bought frequently, there is but one reference to bottles—chopin (p. 150).

Dundee seems to have been the most convenient market for supplies, such as fish and what we now know as groceries. A few traces of trade occur. 'For fraught of the clock' (p. 10) may hint at some shipping, the charge of half-a-crown being considerable for the time. There is no doubt on this head about the entry—'For shipping a kitt of pork' (p. 164). Lairds, we know, did a considerable business in salmon, pork, hides, and corn. Through Dundee came the very little wine of which there is note:—'For more custom att the ports [gates] of Dundee' (p. 78), and again, 'more att the ports, for the loading of the wine' (p. 149). The duty on wine was one of the burgh casualties reserved by the Crown and farmed out for collection. In the Ravelstoun Diary we see how Sir John Foulis succeeded in evading these wine dues on transit from Leith.

Only twice, too, does tea occur, the drink that was to oust brewing from Scottish households, and this only as an item, ‘for mending the tea-kettle’ (p. 71), and again, as a note to the cooper’s November bill of 36s.: ‘It is only to minde it and a tea keatle to have it paid’ (p. 101). These two entries probably refer to the same transaction. Mention of the cooper suggests another lost bit of economy—the pickling of meat. For this much salt is bought in lippies, pecks, and firlots, along with saltpetre, and ‘briston for the beef, 2d.’ Dairying is little noticed. Cows are much more frequently killed for meat than an ox or stot, but the Mains, or home farm, must have supplied the milk, for only twice is it bought, or even mentioned, except occasionally as ‘butter milk for the servants’: ‘January, 1737, 1/1, and February 2/.’¹ Butter is bought less than a dozen times, but not during the months November-January, and this in quantities varying from 1 lb. at 5d. to 5½st. Cheese was little made as yet. We meet it at dinner twice (June, March), at supper thrice (June, July), mainly in the form of cheese cakes. On the other hand the servants have it, for supper, in all thirty-two times (June, July, August, oftenest). It is used at Fowlls only. It is notable that in the unbroken series of menus there is no mention of bread, beer, wine. Tea is to be inferred merely from the mention of a tea-kettle. From the outlays, too, the essential item, soap, is absent, but we find potash and pearl ashes now and again in pennyworths.

Among other details of housekeeping fall to be noted such items as 8d. for sweeping the kitchen chimney (p. 157), a quite modern and moderate outlay, and ‘greess tar and oyle for ye cheinss’ (Glossary, p. 255). Indoor service is soon disposed of. The only notice of wages is: ‘February, 1737, two days’ board wages for Joseph,’ who, from another allusion (p. 22), seems to have been the factotum. Food and clothing formed the bulk of the wages paid: hence we have: 'Pair of shars for the kitchen boy' in March and again in August, while in July comes a pair to the brewer, each pair costing 2s. 6d. Early in the book John Stewart gets a pair of stockings at 1s. 6d. (p. 2), all which goes to upset the received notion that such things were made at home. The general impression one gets is that petty marketing must have been very much the same as now. The only allusions to dress are small purchases of 'blew thred, a drop bleu silk, a yead plaiding,' and the obscure stuffs, 'cherry wating and yellow taminy.' The tailor, always assumed to have been a regular visitant in households, is nowhere referred to, but about the New Year one piece of beef is given to 'the wever,' for ordinary or extraordinary service no one can tell.

As the feudal system was then in force, with its services due to the laird in lieu of rent,¹ little note is taken of outdoor labour, except such significant entries as a sheepskin for the mill (to make what was called a wecht for lifting the grain in winnowing and dressing it), 'hogs feet and earrs for the servants and men at the linte' (p. 140), 'a peice of pork for men that wrocht att the lint' (flax dressing) in March (p. 139), and on September 22, 'cutt six leges of Cooper beefe' [pickled] 'into 30 peices for servants and the shearers and workmen leading in the corns' (p. 201). In the previous season there was noted: August, 1797, 'an ox for the shearers cutt in 20 peices' (p. 70), and in September another. From the character of the food doled out to the humble labourers, indoor and outdoor, one can picture the social condition of the lower orders. The sad plight of the large mendicant class is hinted at in such casual and rare charities as 'given to a poor man per order, 2d.,' 'for the poor, 2d.' (p. 154), 'for the poor boy, 1s.' These doles were commonly associated with churchgoing, but of this we have not even a glimpse. Unlike the Angus lairds, Episcopal and non-juring almost to a man, the Murrays were Presbyterian. The second baronet, only a few years dead, had been intrusted with money for pacifying the Highlands under William of Orange. But they can hardly have belonged to the straiter and True Blue sect, for on Sundays the menu is as generous as on weekdays. Lord Gray sends on Sunday the 14th August (p. 69) six partridges, and on a Sunday there is actually a sheep killed. It must have been no part of the writer's duty to deal with the higher life of the family, and in this regard the book compares unfavourably with the contemporary Ravelstoun diary which Sir John Foulis kept for himself. No book purchases, no newsletters, no external references of any kind occur. To the work of our scribe himself must belong the entries for writing materials. These were very sparingly used, for such charges seldom occur. On the right-hand column of each page of the book the menus are entered, and on the left the daily 'charge' or outlay, with a weekly breviate in a more elaborate hand. The German double s is used, a long and a short, and the German t. Between vowels the English t is used, but always unstroked. There are very few blunders in the writing.

The House Booke fails us at many points of general expenditure, but in the matter of food-supply it is exhaustive. Butcher meat was bought both in large and small quantities, veal and beef in quarters and sides—'killed a veal bought from Milnab' (now part of Crieff), and again one 'bought at Creife.' A mill, on a lade from the river Turret, still represents the Abbot's Mill of Crieff at the foot of a bank looking westwards over a broad holm. Drummond, the noted Lord Provost of Edinburgh, who carried through the New Town scheme, was in his time a laird of Milnab. A sheep, at no time bought, formed the stand-by at all seasons, which is a surprise, as, till past the middle of the century, flocks are always reckoned to have been few in number, small and scraggy, and very delicate. They appear also as hog, widder, tupe, yew, and lamb. A ‘hoge’ is a fat sheep. Any doubt on the point is met by the entry, ‘Mutton of the hoge’ (p. 188). On the other hand, goats are mentioned only twice—‘kids and buckies’ (shellfish) as a supper dish (p. 24), and ‘October, 1738, received a goat from Dundie, made 2 quarters in hams.’ The animals must have been plentiful, for the goat-whey cure was then in great vogue, especially in the Highlands. Pigs are often killed, especially in winter, and even four at a time: ‘2 to rost and 2 for collaring,’ to form what we now call rolled bacon. Calves, lambs, and pigs moved about, now and again, would be small, for they must have been carried in horse creels. Cured hams seem to be the only produce disposed of to outside parties, and this in the form of barter, as ‘Brock a ham for eggs’ (p. 165). . The ‘handy man’ on the farm must have been kept busy as butcher. He is supplied with a ‘sticking knife, a slachter axe and a cliver’ (p. 189). The institution of the ‘winter mairt’ was a necessity then, for the bestial was in good condition at Martinmas (whence ‘mairt’) after the summer grass, and no turnips were as yet grown in the open. At Fowlis, however, it is almost entirely fresh meat that is used for the table. From August to September inclusive the killings are most frequent: for 1737, 13 oxen or cows, 25 sheep, and 7 pigs; for 1738, 11 oxen, 42 sheep, and 3 pigs. During the first half of 1738 all the notes are: ‘March, an ox twice; April, an ox and a quarter from Fintry; May, a leg from the same; June, half a leg bought; July, an ox killed.’ As evidence of the practice of stall-feeding, there is the interesting note: ‘January, 1738, killed ane large ox, sent a quarter to Lord Gray, weight 8 stone’ (Dutch). Other notes bearing on the art of cattle rearing in marked contrast to its advanced condition now are: ‘Ap., hind leg 5 and a half stone; May, one a stone heavier; August, again, two weighing only 3 and a half stone.’ These ‘stots’ must have been poorly developed creatures. There was milk, too, even in midwinter, as an improvement on the weak substitute treacle beer, for we find a ‘veal’ bought in Crieff in December and again in January. The earliest lamb noted is on March 30—Old Style, as Dr. Hay Fleming assures me.

Poultry and eggs are entered on every page. The eggs are always bought (2d. a dozen), and appear daily, Sundays excepted. Eggs in the shell is almost a standing supper dish. Over sixty dozen were used some months; even January has twenty-eight. On the other hand, fowls are rarely purchased. An occasional gift of them comes in, but the bulk would form the kain or rent in kind due from the ‘kindly tenants.’ They form the ‘toujours perdrix’ of the table—‘in the broth’ almost daily, roast, boiled, ‘fricasied, given to the hawks.’ As early as February chickens are bought. After June they are given to the hawks, and in July five go to their natural enemy, ‘eaten by the wissel’ (p. 180). Ducklings are on the table in June and July; muscovys in September. Ducks, geese, and turkeys were sent to Ochtertyre from Fowlis, where there was a special run for them: ‘From Fowls 2 ducks from the green house, a green goose.’ The ‘green’ here is the meadow-run for them by the burnside. The baronial dovecot is of great service during the summer months (p. 202).

While Fowlis seems to have been the kindly home of the family, and the scene of its social ties, Ochtertyre, in respect both of the house itself and its surrounding, afforded a charming retreat. A note, considerably supplied by Mr. P. Keith Murray, gives one a precise picture of this Highland home. ‘Old Ochtertyre house,’ he says, ‘contained a parlour, dining-, drawing-, and school-rooms, housekeeper’s room, nine bedrooms, two servants’ rooms (with five beds), three garrets, laundry, kitchen, bottle cellar, barrel cellar, and pantry. Outhouses were brewhouse, guill or still-house, slaughter-house, milk-house, bake-house and two “woman houses.”’ It was thus a very complete establishment. As it stood higher up the hill than the modern house, the prospect it afforded across Strathearn to the distant Ochils, closing in on the left, with the woods of Dupplin and the Earn sweeping past the house of Gask, was superb. On the right the eye rested on the rugged slopes that overhang Glenartney and the rocky knolls that hem in Lochearn, while away on the distant horizon Ben Voirlich's graceful cone hung in the north-western sky. Within the nearer domain the wild cascades of the Turrat leapt in foam through the gorge below the great hills to the north. Down in the level below the escarpment on which the house stands slept the rush-bordered loch. Within its social circle lay Abercairney eastward, Glenalmond and Amulree northward among the hills, Lawers near to Comrie on the west, and Drummond Castle southward across the Earn.

As the family spent the fall of the year at Ochtertyre, apparently for sport, it is interesting to watch here the beginnings of what has grown to be a great social feature. It so happens that the House Booke can be supplemented in this regard from the Memoirs of Sir John Clerk of Penicuik (Scot. Hist. Soc.). He had been in the habit of betaking himself to Moffat for 'the pouting,' as grouse-shooting was then known, but in 1749 he was sporting tenant of Lawers, beautifully situated a little further up Strathearn than Ochtertyre. The laird of Lawers was the Brigadier Camble so often mentioned as a kindly neighbour in our record. The pastime of Sir John might very well stand for that of the Ochtertyre house-party. 'Our diversions were fishing and hare-hunting. . . . I had a fishing-rod but did little good with it. . . . At one draught, in a pool in the Earn, we got four or five salmon besides trouts. . . . At Loch Turrat we sh'd have catched trout by the rod, but had very bad sport, and saw much snow.' He makes no mention of shooting, while deer were but a curious feature of the landscape. Five miles off, in Glenartney, we 'saw some flocks of deer of the great red kind, but they keep the high grounds, so we had no great satisfaction in the visite but to see a very high, wild country on both sides of a narrow glen.' The low ground cover round Abercairney, and the wilds round Loch Turrit and Amulree in the Sma' Glen, all noted in the House Booke, afforded ideal sport from the modern point of view. That the conditions were appreciated even then is shown from Mr. Omund's President Dundas of Arniston. Between 1735 and 1746 he was in the habit of resorting hither for sport and the goat-whey cure. Writing home in June 1743, from Shien, near Amulree, he says: 'Fishing goes on, and Tom hath taken a little touch of shooting, but Currie and Vogrie's dogs seem good for nothing.' Between Crieff and Amulree the distance of about twelve miles had to be done on horseback. These remarks are from the point of view of the sportsman, whereas that of the House Booke concerns itself merely with the supplementing of the daily food-supply, obtained anyhow. The situation was very much that revealed in the 'Account-book of Dame Magdalen Nicholson (1671-93),' which Mr. A. O. Curle has contributed to Proceedings of the Scottish Antiquaries (vol. xxxix.): 'Game chiefly procurable during the spring and early summer, the pot-hunter seemingly being most successful when the severe weather made snaring more easy, or their domestic concerns rendering them a readier prey to his hagbut.' The rare and slight allusion to powder and shot in the House Booke argues no great use of the hagbut at Fowlls. President Dundas seems to hint at shooting over dogs, but this was scarcely practicable till near the close of the century. Of partridge shooting, late in the preceding century, Penn the Quaker says: 'To shoot well flying is well, but to attempt it has more of vanity than of judgment.' Patrick Walker, quoting Prophet Peden, treats the taking of the prey sitting on the ground as the ordinary procedure: 'A fowler, when he shoots a bird, it may rise and fly, but not far, for there is some of the shot in it.'

xxxii OCHTERTYRE HOUSE BOOKE OF ACCOMPS

The food-supply now brings us within the realm of sport, at Fowlls, but unfortunately the only reference to it, in the modern sense, is the note: 'March 25, rec. a brace of hares killed by fentrys hounds.'¹ Lead and gunpowder appear in early spring as single purchases, and there is the entry: 'Mar., 1737, powder and shot to Joseph 1s. 5d.' We may rightly assume that Joseph was the fowler. Such expenses as these: 'Thigh of beefe for the hawks' (p. 66), 'rump for the hawks' (p. 71), 'for the fowller pr ordor 2d.' (p. 43), and the frequent reference to fowls for the hawks, all point to the mode relied on, along with snares and traps, for supplying the table with game. The fowler lived at Fowlls, though there is a tradition that Glenturret, near Ochtertyre, was of old noted for a fine breed of falcons. The Duke of Atholl is said to have presented some of these Glenturret birds to George III. at his coronation in token of his lordship over the Isle of Man. The fowler (corresponding to the modern gamekeeper) was able to supply a greater variety of what passed then for game than would be expected now, and here it is interesting to look for any evidence of seasonal sport. In 1738 moorfowl come, as a gift from Lintrose among the Sidlaws, early in July. They were a month later in 1737: 'wilde foul from the hills' (p. 68). There seems to have been the best sport in autumn and spring. Nothing appears before July, when moorfowl come in. On August 8, 1737, we have '33 wildfowl from the hills,' with eight on the following day (p. 68). 'July 30, 1738, 13 moorfowl from the fowller': 'Sent 4 to fentry' is another note. On the 13th of August, 'received a Dear from the forrist' (p. 69) is followed by 'dinner—venison soup, supper—venison collops.' Venison is now for some days on the table, but on the 18th it is so far spent that we have 'servants—knap of beef and neck of venison' (p. 71). In September a quarter of venison from Lord Gray is followed by venison cutlets and a pasty two days after. The sole reference to deer in 1739 is a gift of one from Blairphetty in Blair Athole parish.

Up to the end of February there is a fair supply of partridge (beginning September) and woodcock (beginning October). Much of the game was very miscellaneous, and taken whenever it was to be had; 'January, feltefers [fieldfares];¹ February, plover, snipe, whaup [greater curlew], tarmikines [ptarmigan], moorfowl; March, wild duck; April, a wild goose and moorfowl; May, dottereles;² June, a few hares and a wild duck; July, kittywakes³ [seagulls]; August, four sollen geese from Edinburgh [then a great dainty], roasted and eaten with French beans, quells roast; September, partridges very often; October, teals; November, wild duck.' On August 3 there is the sole reference—'broak [barter] a hern'—to what is always thought to have been a noble quarry for the fowler. Pigeons supplement the supply of birds in April, May, August, September, October—'from the dovcot' of Fintry, Gray and Kinfauns (but see also p. 202). Hares begin in October (see p. 170), but are most frequent in January and February, when the snow would betray their raids on the kail-yard.

'The sun had clos'd the winter day,
The curlers quat their roaring play,
An' hunger'd maukin taen her way,
To kail-yards green,—
While faithless snaws ilk step betray Whare she has been.'

BURNS, The Vision.

Only twice is there mention of rabbits, both in February 1737 (pp. 17, 19), three pairs in all, price 4d. a pair. It is difficult to understand why we hear so little of the rabbit in olden times.¹ Though a sub-tropical rodent, it ought to have spread rapidly in Scotland from its habits and extraordinary fecundity. Not till so late as 1845 do we find it introduced into Argyll. That it was regarded as somewhat troublesome vermin is evident from the fact that it was generally confined to islets. On the other hand the hare was by far the most popular and familiar game. In early spring occur such small game as ‘whaps,’ ‘plivers,’ a wood-pigeon, ‘tarmikins’ (roast on three successive days), blackbirds often, small birds unnamed, and snipe. One day a single blackbird appears on the table, roast. It may have been a blackcock, but such a name never occurs. Then, as now, at Ochtertyre the coot, or its congener the water-hen, ‘dived merry on the lake,’ for on October 24, 1737, we find ‘watter fowlis rost.’ Next year, on the 23rd, the lake is again helpful—‘supper, pike boyld and young peas.’ In all this there is hardly sufficient evidence of sport or a sporting season. As ‘the gentry’ take no part in such pleasures, they must have been idle enough. It is significant of a seasonal sport to find the usual game appearing, as now, in autumn. In September partridges appear at table on twenty days, eleven consecutive.

Feudal sport pictures itself to the imaginative reader in romantic colours. Our House Booke records two actual shooting seasons, so called, during the autumns of 1737 and 1738—season and venue ideal from the modern point of view, the one opening at Ochtertyre, Wednesday, 21st September 1737, and closing at Fowlis on Saturday, 25th December. The other begins a month later, but ends early in February 1739. The contrast here with the constant purchases of outside supplies at Fowlis is most marked. But for a calf bought in Crieff and a few ‘compliments’ in kind, the establishment almost sustained itself, by meat killed, such garden stuff as ‘colly flower, pottatoes, & keall,’ apples and pears, poultry, with game netted or hawked; for there is no mention of guns or dogs. During the opening weeks, beginning with the 21st of the month, partridges are the only game. At Fowlls they seem to have been more plentiful, due to the better farming there. From 13th August onwards till the family moved to Ochtertyre, it was literally ‘toujours perdrix’ at table. With October woodcock came in to supplement the bill. Of moor-fowl, then meaning grouse, there are only two birds, and this towards the end of December. To these should most probably be added the blackbirds of the list, of which Ochtertyre is credited with one. Wild duck, from 5th November, numbered twelve. ‘Sent three wilde duck to the Brigadiers this day’—5th Dec. 1787—is a case in point. One snipe, a blackbird, ‘a watter fowl’ (probably a water hen), and teal appear. Hares were fairly plentiful—sixteen in number—of which one was sent to Fowlls. The only salmon occurring came from Mrs. Hickson in Perth, on 26th November (p. 105), of which a piece was generously sent off to a neighbour, the laird of Abercairney. The family were still dependent on Fowlls for an occasional (twice) supply of ‘white fish.’ Along with the salmon Mrs. Hickson sends sparlings from the Tay (p. 105). The only market fish that reached Ochtertyre was herring, once entered as ‘fresh.’ The numerous entries of herrings must apply to pickled, such as formed the poorest of food in those days. Twice is this supply varied with ‘hard fish.’ To these were added pike from the loch, on three occasions. Crieff, the only populous place near, seems to have been of small account for domestic marketing. In consequence there are few table ‘delicacies’ served up at Ochtertyre, which may account for the lack of what we call ‘sweets.’

The Game List for both seasons at Ochtertyre, compiled from the weekly ‘breviates,’ shows at a glance the autumn sport in number and in kind.

Of the kindred sport, fishing, there is but one bit of evidence—‘April 3, for 12 picke hooks with bras weirs to them, 4s.,’ referring to the special measures taken to secure, by ground lines, the formidable pike, plentiful in the many lochs about, especially at Lundie, not far off. Here was a lake of over fifty acres area—the Piper—drained in 1780 for marl or shell manure. The Statistical Account of 1845 says: ‘It is now only a reedy marsh, frequented, specially in winter, by vast numbers of water-fowl.’ From it flowed the stream that passed Fowlls Castle on its way to Invergowrie bay. In autumn we find the dish, ‘a cabilow of pike,’ the French dish ‘brochet à la cabillaud.’ About the same time occur pike and puddings, pike broyld, pike for the servants. To the lochs we also owe the dishes ‘fried perchis’ (frequent in summer), and in October ‘tart and broyld eells,’ and ‘eells and apple fritters.’ Though the Dichty Water is in the parish of Fowlls, it had then no trout. Some are sent in or bought in April, March, and August. The estuary of the Tay was not far off, but in those days salmon fishing went with the farms, and nothing was done to prosecute it till the crop was in and the pools blocked with running fish. There was no outside market, and the common price was a penny a pound. Before the close of the century, however, there was here a trade with London, the fish being sent by sea, packed in ice. The new process was suggested by Dempster of Dunnichen, one of the ablest of the Scots M.P.s. The Fowlls family bought at prices ranging from 1s. 3d. to 2s. 10d., weights not given, and not more than two a month, except in June. The blank months are August-October inclusive. In May we find—‘Eggs and salmond for the servants’—sole support here of the fiction, due to the too credulous Burt, and repeated ad nauseam, that in Scotland servants, when feeding, bargained for salmon at supper not oftener than thrice a week, ‘so common was it.’

Of salt-water fish there was a constant and varied supply, doubtless borne in the creels of the cadger’s packhorse, exactly as in the days of Robert Henryson’s Fables.¹ As the Dutch busses were then sweeping the coast for their favourite fish, it is of interest to note herring, or harring (Ger. Häring) as it is always spelt, in January, February, March ('for the workmen'), July, August (frequent, and for servants), and December (last Sunday of the year), ‘bufft harring.’ The list includes ‘hadoc’ (fresh and berre, or cured at Bervie),² cod, codshead (a dish at one time familiar as ‘crappit heeds’), ‘whitens,’ flounders and dabs (a kindred fish) in strings, ‘soalls,’ ‘scate,’ ‘kealling’ (cod), ‘turbit,’ mackerel, sparlings or smelts. This last, a small silvery fish of the salmon kind, must have entered the Tay in great shoals. Twice there are gifts of them—January 300, November

² Bervie knows nothing whatever of fishing now except a coble or two to work the salmon stake-nets.

260 (pp. 4, 105). The most interesting shellfish, the oyster, appears as a gift (300) in January, and a little barrel in March (at 9d.), how little may be judged from the purchase of 200 in September for 1s. 6d. (pp. 2, 79, 140). Besides these we have cockles, mussels, lobster, buckies, partons (crabs), and a pennyworth of dulse and tangle (still a favourite edible seaweed in Dundee). ‘Dulse and tang-el’—Midlothian drawl on the penult—was a favourite Leith Street cry in the Edinburgh of my youth. The mussels were not the marine variety, but from the river Earn.

At both houses there must have been regular supplies from the garden, though there are no charges of any kind for its upkeep. At Ochtertyre, September 1737, there is the note: ‘Rec. from fowlls some garden things.’ In autumn apples appear in due course in a tart and a cake, ‘bakit,’ fritters, apples and cream. We have also stewed pears, and in June (11th) a gooseberry fool and a gooseberry tart. There must have been some mode of preserving such fruits, since in February we find an apple and gooseberry tart. Under June 25, 1738, we have ‘a sallad and strawberrys.’ Fruit was also bought—‘18 pears, 1d.’ (January), apples and pears, 1s. (October). Nor were foreign fruits beyond reach; witness the notes: ‘Doz. lemons att Perth, 2s.’; and again in May, June, and July, with a doz. oranges (1s.) in April. Dried fruits for puddings are regular purchases—‘currans, reasons, cor-dicitron, orange peel, prewins, amonds.’ From the menus we can stock the vegetable garden with pease as a standing summer dish, beginning end of June, and then almost daily, beans and pork same month, French beans in July, ‘eggs and artichokes’ in June, ‘pees, artichokes, and cucumbers’ in July and onwards, neat’s feet and ‘asparagus’ in March, in July mushrooms and lettuce and eggs, in September partridges and ‘cellery,’ and in March a ‘carat’ pudding, and again in August, in October ‘geess boyld and onions.’ ‘A sallad’ is a frequent item, cucumbers seldom, while ‘spinage and eggs’ is a regular supper dish. Occasional items are ‘eggs in the shell and brockla, brockla and collared pigs, mutton and collyflowr, rump of beef and cabag (November), savoys and puddings and buttered savoys’ (December). The soup has almost always a vegetable —‘cellery, netl, cabage, green, herb, green keall.’ All this argues a surprising decree of comfort and refinement. Turnips are unrepresented, though we find a rare mention of them in Archbishop Sharp’s diary as early as 1664. No potatoes were as yet known in the open field, but they are here as an occasional dish, both at Ochtertyre and at Fowlls. They appear, as first of the season, in August served with artichokes, in September with stewed peas and greens, in October as a pie, in January with cold ham for supper, in February with tripe for supper, and in March as a tart, and again with eggs. Onions are noted, but not leeks.

The kitchen garden, even from our standpoint, seems thus to have been well stocked. On its culinary uses some light is thrown by a curious little cookery-book, the work of Mrs. M’Lintock, and printed in Glasgow in 1736. She tells in full detail how to preserve green gooseberries, involving the picking out of the seeds with a pin, and letting the berries simper in a pan till the syrup of their own weight of sugar be thick, previously clarified with white of egg.

The cooks seem not to have gone outside the garden for variety, if we except the not infrequent reference to nettle soup. But at this period the taste for ‘appetisers’ was quite of the gipsy type. Mrs. M’Lintock makes a conserve of dog-hips and syrups of nettles, sweet violets, tussilago or colt’s-foot, jellyflowers (gilliflower), red poppies, maiden-hair. She gives directions how to pickle broom buds. Here, in default of a better place, may be put the obscure dish of the House Booke, ‘jellys of harts horn.’ How it was made we learn from Smith’s Compleat Housewife (1736): ‘Fill a large gallipot with hartshorn (ammonia) and spring water, tie a double paper over the pot, and set it in the oven with the household bread. In the morning run it through a jelly bag. Season with the juice of lemons, double refined sugar, and whites of eggs well beaten. Let it have a boil, then run through the jelly bag into your jelly glasses. Put a bit lemon peel in the bag.'

Two of the kitchen vegetables at Fowls call for special notice. At Ochtertyre in the late autumn we have several times 'skerrit fryed.' The word is a corruption of skirroot or sugar-root. This tuberous esculent is the water-parsnip, a native of China, at one time much cultivated over Europe. It was eaten boiled, with butter and pepper; or half-boiled, and subsequently fried. The Compleat Housewife gives quaint directions about making a Skirret Pye: 'Your pye being ready lay in your skirrets, blanched, with the marrow of 3-4 bones, cinnamon, sugar, a little salt and grated bread. Add the yolks of 12 hard boiled eggs, halved, a handful of chestnuts boiled and blanched, and some candied peel. Lay butter a-top and the lid on. Let in the caudle be white wine, verjuice, some sack and sugar; thicken with yolks of eggs, and when baked pour it and serve hot. Scrape sugar on it.' On another occasion the mysterious 'scorch-anarrow' (p. 142) appears on the table. With the help of a hint from a shrewd and erudite antiquarian friend¹ I have been able to solve the riddle. It represents the Carse of Gowrie pronunciation of the Italian scorzonera, French scorsonère, viper's grass, from its ancient use against snake bite. Dies derives the word from (1) Scorzone, Latin, serpentaria, or (2) scorza nera, black root. The esculent portion is the root, carrot-shaped, but in colour like a parsnip. In cooking it is first scraped, steeped for some time in water to take away a peculiar flavour, then boiled and served like carrot. As evidence that it still has a place in some large gardens, there lie before me full directions for growing it in the Seed List of Drummond and Sons, Stirling.

The meals served were invariably two—dinner and supper—with one for the servants. Very rarely is there allusion to breakfast: ‘Ap. 1, 1737, mutton broyld for brackfast,’ and ‘Ap. 5, for brackfast pigeons broyld.’ Breakfast was only, as the word implies, an early bit, and in all probability, under ordinary conditions, that ‘unconsidered trifle,’ the national porridge, formed the repast. The meal is rarely mentioned, though the New Philological Dictionary shows a continuous series of references in English books from the middle of the fifteenth century. It gives, from Tindale’s translation of the Bible (1526), ‘Esau which for one breakfast sold his right,’ Heb. xii. 16. Somerville of Jedburgh (Reminiscences, going back to our period) found, from the House Book of the Duchess of Hamilton, breakfast on shoulders of mutton and such substantial fare.

Dinner was the ‘Déjeuner à la fourchette’ and mainstay of the table. The scale on which the menus are constructed is not a uniform one. Occasionally they are more elaborate than usual, particularly in the autumn, and when Ochtertyre is the venue. The harvest was then secure, live stock in the best condition, the shortening day hinted of winter—conditions all favourable to an excess of sociability. As a specimen, take the following menu at Ochtertyre in late September, an extra long one, though the day was Sunday and the family Presbyterian: ‘Dinner—Skink [shank bone] and tripe, beefe rost, hams boyld, tongues and lure [cow’s udder], hard fish and a plumb pudding, calves head hasht and pease, partridge and cellery, turkeys rost and larded, gees rost, pigeons rost, tarts and collard pipe, beefe for servants. Supper—Beefe in stakes, veall rost, pigeon in a pye, spinage and eggs, artichokes, puddings, smoakt beef and pickles, fowls for broth.’ An unusually meagre one, again, is that of December 24—Christmas Eve, be it noted: ‘Dinner—Keall, Beefe boyld one peice. Supper—Eggs.¹ There is always soup, including such national varieties as ‘sheephead broth, hare keall, cockie leekie and foulis, hodge podge mutton in it.’ The meat, roast and boiled, includes beef, except in the spring and summer, and this fresh; mutton and poultry always, and in general game and fish. Some of the dishes call for special notice as peculiar or obscure, such as ‘roast tongue and udder, boar’s head slicht, lamb’s head stovd [stewed], calve’s head hasht, pork griskins, caperation of turkey, small birds, eggs in the shells, beefe stakes ragoud pieces, veall in cuttlets, anchoves, pettytoes [pig’s feet] and collard pig, potted hare and a tanzie, peas and sillibubs, hog’s feet and ears, olives of beefe and Scots collops, dads and blads [probably a dish of scraps, blads=curly greens], fish’—fresh water in summer, white mostly in winter, herrings in summer; these are served with such sauces as ‘egg, crab, ale, boyld with mustard sauce, salmond and oyster sauce, scate and egg sauce, turbot with greeve sauce, a sallad and perchis, collard eels and eggs.’ Supper is a less elaborate meal, generally showing an absence of the more serious meats. Thus we find here such oddments as ‘goos giblets, puddings, eggs and sweet breeds, sour cakes fryd, small birds, eggs and potatoes, jellyes of calves feet, chickens fricasied, trouts, hog’s cheek and fritters, the veall’s pluck, sweet breeds and kidneys, neats feet and asparagus, eggs and gravé, and a parton pye.’

The foregoing paragraph calls for detailed annotation.

'castocks' (cabbage stems), i.e. 'copiously to the broth and not trust to what followed.'

'Tongue and lure.'—Mrs. M'Lintock thus tells how to dress a 'Tongue and Lure sweet: to two tongues and a lure take beaten almonds, currans and raisins. Boil till the first be plump; season with grated Lemon-peil, cinnamon and nutmeg; and stick the Lure and Tongues among the almond and raisins. Garnish the plate with fried parsly and slicht Lemona.'

'Collard pige' is the collar or neck part of the pig, rolled up like brawn, and so preserved.

'Caperata of turkey,' a dish of several remnants of meat or fowla. 'Capirotade' in Halliwell's Dictionary of Provincialisms is defined as stewed mincemeat. Minsheu describes it as a stew of veal, capon, chicken, or partridge minced, and laid upon several beds of cheese.

'Cockie-leekie,' or a cock or other fowl boiled with leeks, is familiar as an old Scots dish. 'Potted hare and a tanzie' points to an old English dainty in great repute. The tanzie is a plant, in appearance and habit closely resembling the ragwort. It was in great favour in old-fashioned gardens from the strongly aromatic property of its leaves. Hand-ball for tansy cakes was played during the Easter holidays at school. Selden thinks the taste for these cakes was due to the Jewish habit of eating bitter herbs at the Passover. A tansy was made of eggs, cream, rose-water, sugar, the juice of such herbs as tansy, the whole baked with butter in a shallow pewter dish. In one of Pepys's 'pretty dinners' a tansy, two neats' tongues, and cheese form the second course. The word 'tansy' is a corruption of ἀθανασία, immortality, from its use in medicine (Skeat, Etymological Dictionary). 'Goos giblets' were the 'by-products' of a goose—heart, liver, gizzard—often served in the form of a pie. A 'vealls pluck' is the heart and lungs of a calf. Boiled and minced small, it formed, in old-fashioned farm-houses, the chief element in

haggis. A ‘cow’s draught’ is the stomach and intestines. ‘Parton pye’ is a crab pie, under the familiar antique name for this crustacean.

In comparison with modern tastes the fare seems somewhat to lean to the solid side, but some appreciation of dainties and ‘whigmaleeries’ is also evident in the form of puddings with fruit—almond, plum, and apple—custard, ‘omlit and potted beef,’ stewed pears (often in autumn), while ‘cream de sodwell’ (p. 180) seems an echo of fashionable cookery. The grocery bill bespeaks some culinary refinement, for, besides such staple relishes as mustard, vinegar, salad oil, and even pickles, we have the usual spices—black pepper, nutmegs, ‘cinneimond,’ black spice, mace, and cloves. During the two years and more about a hundredweight of sugar is used—powdered at 6d., refined at 9d., and loaf at 1s. a pound. As no account is taken of wine possets (save as a sillabub, i.e. wine or cider mixed with cream) or of tea, this must have gone to the sweetening of the dinner-table. Some light is also thrown on the economy of the household by the list of what might be called drugs—hartshorn, cuschinell (cochineal), pearl and potashis, for soap-making at home, oyle and lamp black. The family bill of health must have been a clean one, for the only notes here are a ‘drop safron’ (stamens of the crocus, dried, of old a favourite medicine), a mutchkin rose-water and bottle 6d., and a bottle ‘elexar salutas’ 3d.

The social life of the lower orders is for the most part inarticulate in history. Doubly interesting, therefore, is the daily record of the servants’ ‘twal hours.’ In the absence of the quartern loaf and the ever-simmering teapot, it would have to be supplemented by beer, milk, porridge, oatcakes, and kitchen fee (dripping). It mainly consisted of such oddments as ‘puddings and hagas, cow’s draught, cow’s head, pigs and harrings, hog’s head and feet, harrings and pigeons, ox pluck and puddings, the two joints of boyld lamb that was in the broth.’ On a Wednesday ‘killd a tupe’ is entered, and on the Sunday there appears—‘Quarters of the tupe for servts’ (pp. 194-5). In June ‘cheese for the servants,’ and in July ‘pees and butter milk’ and ‘pees and cheese’ are frequently to be found. These were the days of the summer sheelings, held at a season when the best pasture of the year kept the churn and the cheese-press busy, but no such custom is reflected in the House Booke.

The Account Book of Dame Magdalen Nicholson, already referred to, affords useful comparison with the Ochtertyre House Booke at many points. What Mr. Curle says of the one is equally true of the other: ‘a typical country gentleman’s establishment in the last quarter of the seventeenth century.’ The difference of date is inappreciable, as social change in those days was slight. On the personal side the Dame’s jottings are fuller. The record of frequent visits, with their notes of ‘drink-money’ and ‘vails’ (gratuities), the list of ‘drugs’ for the invalid laird, and catalogue of books on the shelves, introduce features absent from the other. Brought up in the higher circles of Edinburgh, we must take her for a ‘grande dame’ of the period, but her spelling is much more quaint and comically phonetic than that of our record. She reckons in Scots money, whereas we have to do with sterling. Details can best be compared by outlining them on parallel lines, thus:—

The following notes from Sir John Sinclair's Statistical Account, on the conditions prevailing in immediately adjoining parishes about the year 1760, will help the reader to fill in a social background, on its humbler side, to the picture evolved from the House Booke. In Mains of Fintry, 'two small farms only enclosed—land rent 6/- an acre—the minister has half an acre in wheat, none grown elsewhere—no sown grass, no turnips; no cabbage or potatoes growing in the open field—oxen in the plough—£7 a great price for a horse—a ploughman's wage £3, a maid's 30/-—the minister and a Quaker alone wear English cloth—men clad in woollen plaiting, women in coarse plaids—no cloak nor bonnet worn by any woman in the parish.' Longforgan's state, again, immediately to the west of Fowlis, reads thus: 'Fruits ripen on a common wall, cherries about the end of June, apricots in the middle of August, pears from the end of July to October. The old cottages are narrow and low, of turf and stone with clay for mortar, roofed with thatch, turf, and straw.' Thus we have in these observations and in the House Book evidence of those striking social contrasts which meet the student of the remoter past at every turn. The obvious lesson is to scrupulously avoid, in drawing conclusions, the pitfalls of a one-sided and prejudiced point of view.

From the foregoing pages it should be possible to form a definite picture of the standard of living in an average baronial establishment just before the 'Forty-five. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not know the principle on which the book was kept. While the menus must be accepted as complete, the details of outside purchases, wages, supply and upkeep of house requisites, cost of family movements—these are probably far from inclusive. This is especially true of residence at Ochtertyre, where there are no 'charges' for groceries, eggs, barm. But on some points, specially dietary, farm, garden, and game produce, it is unique. The casual observer might see too much sameness in the pages, but on closer observation he will be surprised at the variety of the dishes, and even at the attractiveness of the cook's art. He ought to appreciate highly, too, the admirable housekeeping shown in turning resources to good account. Thus all the by-products of the shambles are utilised, such as head, heart, pluck, draught, sweetbread, udder, marrow, ears, and feet, either per se or in haggis and puddings (marrow, black, white). As illustrating the domestic economy of the time, let me add a brief note on the cost of living then at Fowlis, incomplete owing to quantities being roughly given and to much of the stuff having been sent in gifts or found at home. Of butcher-meat only beef is bought, and that in quantities (a side, 8s.), and veal (do. 5s. 8d.), and 2 lbs. sausages for 8d. These must generally have been made at home, for 2d. is paid for a 'filler for sausages.' By far the most frequent food is eggs and poultry, including pigeons in great abundance. The baronial privilege must have been greatly abused in those days, for the birds simply lived on the tenants. I have seen the house-book of a mansion in Lower Clydesdale in which

xlviii OCHTERTYRE HOUSE BOOKE OF ACCOMPS

172 pairs of pigeons were sold in 1778 at 6d. a pair. At Fowlls they were either reared at home or gifted. The only purchases of poultry are 9 chickens (1s. 1½d.), 6 do. (10d.), 6 do. large (9d.). In Clydesdale they are sold at 7d. a pair. The estuary of the Tay must have been then a good fishing-ground, for the supply, through Dundee, is plentiful and cheap. It must have proved a good half-hour's bargaining with the cadger when 'my Lady' got '34 haddoes, a code, a string of whitens, and 4 partons' for 1s. 7½d. Herrings at 4d. a dozen (once 50 for 1s.) formed a cheap food. Equally cheap prices were: '8 mackerll, 6d.'; 'haddoes, 3d. a doz.'; '2 soalls and carraige, 4½d.'; 'a string of dabs, 3d.'; '200 sparlings, 5d.' We can also price such marine dainties as '2 lobsters, 7½d.; 2 partons, 2d.; partons' toes, 9d.; 200 oysters, 1s. 6d.; dulce and tangle, 1d.; cockles, 4d.' Salmon was bought always, an occasional gift excepted, but price per pound is not given. The whole fish ranged from 1s. 6d. to 3s. 3d. ('2 grilsis, 10d.', p. 182). They were size enough to admit of a half being given to a friend. The Clydesdale family sold largely, showing the value of the river then, above Glasgow, as a salmon stream. They got 7d. a lb., and sold, for 1790, 560 lbs. Those caught on 21st and 27th May 1788 averaged 16 lbs. each. One gift of salmon that reached Fowlls on a Sunday in February 1788 shows that the upper waters of the Tay were fished, for Bal-lathie, there noted, is in Kinclaven parish and above Perth.

Expenses outside of food are concerned with labour (indoor and outdoor), and the supply of the necessary plant. Of the establishment we can identify John Stewart, Joseph (probably the fowler), the kitchen-boy for indoors, and the brewer, references to whom have been already made. What would seem to be quite a superfluous member of the establishment appears thus: 'chickens for the foxe' (p. 50). This undesirable form of 'freak' appears to be all that is left, about a baron's house, of the mediæval fool and monkey. The sport got out of him was of his own making: 'chickens killed by the foxe, 1' (p. 69). Two others of the predatory kind take 'kain' of the hen-roost, the weasel, and his more formidable congener the stoat or polecat ('foulls killed by the foumirt,' Ochtertyre, December 1738). Unfortunately we have no charges in connection with the garden, and, for the farm, we have merely notes of food for workers at the harvest and flax-dressing. Casual labour must have been abundant when a halfpenny often pays for a message, a penny to carry a cow's hide to Dundee, twopence for a letter, while a boy, for sixpence, takes two pigs and two fowls—in horse-creels—as far as Perth. Even in the capital Dame Nicholson could hire a link and a boy (caddie) to bear it for 5s. Scots.

The working of the kitchen and adjunct offices did not entail much expense. The butcher's axe, cleaver, and gully cost only 6s. 8d. in all. The scullion (kitchen-boy) used up numerous heather ranges, but they cost only a halfpenny, or at most a penny. The cook required only four kitchen knives (3s.), four 'little ladies' (p. 58), and an 'earthen pan for the broth' (p. 81), or soup tureen, at a cost of fivepence. Here one notes a lost industry, that of the mugger, who hawked such turned vessels as 'wooden puding pan, 9½d., and 3 wooden ladles, 4½d.' The service tree and the plane were much used by these rural turners. The brew-house had a constant outlay for barm or yeast at 6d. a stoup. Once we have '2 stoups of barm and a wild drake, 1s. 6d.' The only purchase of what must have been regularly made in the place was 'stoup of ale for the servants, 8d.' 'Hoaps,' again, appear often, at 1s. 8d. a lb. Dame Nicholson, June 1690, 'sent to englon for a pond of hops, 12s.' Scots. In autumn they were much cheaper: September 1691, 4s. a lb. Further comparison with another district, Colstoun, near Haddington, of date 1699, shows an equally modest supply of kitchen and brew-house requisites: '6 pots and pans, a flesh fork, copper ladle, 8 barrels, 28½ doz. chopin bottles, and 7 mutchkin.' These items are from an inventory in a most interesting article by Mr. J. G. A. Baird in ² Draff, the spent wort or husk of the malt, much relished by dairy cows. Old Eng.—Brewer's grains. The liquid refuse, wash or swill, given to swine, is called draeg (Fife), from dreggs.

³ Girds, hoops for barrels, also for trundling. Cp. 'Ca' yer ain girr,' mind your own business.

¹ Tree, sometimes called a gantrice or gantries, a stand for ale-barrels; sometimes also a bit of timber to serve as inclined plane on which the barrel was rolled.

² Tinwall. Mr. Curle takes this to mean a tun or cask, tun-elle—diminutive form. His Inventory of the House of Rossie has, in the cellar, two ‘tonnels.’

³ Broadheads seems to be for ‘boardheads.’

⁵ Kirm with staff, churn with its churn-stick.

⁷ Malsie, a milk-sie, or sieve to strain milk. ‘A sive to the brewhouse, iod.’—House Booke, p. 147.

250 OCHTERTYRE HOUSE BOOKE OF ACCOMPS

¹ Colloop tongs. In the House Booke (p. 76) there is at Foules a charge ‘for a pair of collop tongus, 6d.’ This entry and reading are confirmed by the Inventory here. The u merely hardens the g in tongs as it does in tongue, being in both cases intrusive. The writer must have said tong-gs in writing tongus: cp. sing-ging in the mouth of many speakers. The collop was the piece of meat held over the fire by the tongs. The mince collop was a secondary dish with a collop derivation. In England collops are frequently used unminced, which may account for the expression ‘Scots collops.’ The House Booke has the term minced collops only once, alongside of minced pies and minced fowl. Collops alone occurs frequently—as beefe, mutton, veal, kidney, venison, and hare collops. Of Norse origin, akin to clap, club, from a root, to beat, as herc, a piece of meat with a club or stick to make it tender for cooking.

² Weffer tongs, for handling wafers or cakes while being baked or toasted. In the Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer, vol. vii., for 1538-9, we have ‘deliverit to Murdo Striveling, patesser, to by foure vafroun irnis to the quenis grace—£6.’

² Winter, Mr. Curle tells me, was an article fastened by hooks to the bars of the grate to hold anything requiring to be heated. I have heard a clothes-horse sometimes called ‘winter-dykes.’

whitens (whittings), ducklens, grave (gravy), sauce, a dissyllable, as in 'Chaucer,' berve (Bervie), and Wensday.

Some of the words are genuine antiques, such as oylé (Lat. oleum), cliver and pliver as in 'Burns,' Júlly (Fr. Juli), flook for flounder, and knap, in which the initial is pronounced. To pass over the as yet undeveloped convention in the use of capitals and punctuation marks, one notes the absence of the apostrophe as in 'bullions bote,' and the lost letter for th in ye for the. An idiom, still often heard, is the use of in for motion to a place, as 'for the carriage of a cows skine in Dundee to the tanner' (note the French pronunciation in the form carriage).

Local colour in pronunciation seems to me to be shown in the Angus thin vowel in racks and a spheet (spit), widders, (wedders, wethers), beefe sweit, 'white' for the Lowland whate (wheat), and 'paper' for pepper. The alternative spelling, papper, as indicating the open vowel, is quite regular. That pepper and not paper is intended in these items is proved by a comparison of prices and quantities. Special to the writer, probably due to an effort to make strange words self-explanatory, is the device shown in these doublets—colly flower, pott ashis, wood cocks, salad magundy, icing glass, moy hair, while in 'brinston' for the usual brun-stane, the writer thinks, rightly enough, it means the stone that burns.

Braise, p. 179. Mutt alla braise. Contracted for mutton à la braise. 'To surround with slices of meat, fat beef, herbs, etc., and stew slowly in a closely-covered pan.' Fr. braiser.

Broas, p. 218. 'Supper eggs and broas.' This is the only reference to one of three characteristic, old-time supper dishes on which the changes were rung—sowens, brose, porridge. Brose is hasty pudding, for it requires only meal (oat or pease), boiling water, salt, and vigorous stirring.

Brock, p. 165. Apparently a verb from broker in the general sense of a middleman (Lat. caupo), pedlar, petty dealer from door to door—hence as a verb to chaffer, cheap, barter; original sense in cognate broach, to tap ale. The only sale is in this connection: 'June, 1738, sold 3 pigs at Dundie for 2 doz. herring and the carlige.' This must have been niffering or barter, here called brock. 'Brock a ham for eggs' is an entry in point.

Buffl (herring), p. 12. Maybe pickled herring, but that was too coarse food for the 'high' table. More likely the word expresses the colouring effect in red herring, an agreeable relish. The Rossie Inventory has 'a Buff stand,' connected somehow with the process perhaps. During the wave of economic zeal fostered by James I. late in his reign, and reflected in the Privy Council Register of the period, the making of red herring in the west country was a prominent topic. Yet another conjecture is, that this relish stood on the buffet.

Cabylou, pp. 38 and 78. Cabillian, Du. kabeljauw; Ger. kabeljau, used by all the coast Germans from the fourteenth century. It means codfish, or codfish which has been salted and hung for a few days, but not thoroughly dried; also a dish of cod mashed.'—New Philological Dict.

Caperata, pp. 8 and 215. Capilotade, a hash of poultry, Cassell's Cookery. See Introduction, p. xlivi 'Caperata of capon.'

Cheaiss or Cheinse. The item, 'For gress tar and oyle for y' cheaiss' (p. 8), has given much trouble. In the first place, the reading is doubtful. I made a careful copy of the last word here and read cheinse. Mr. Keith Murray, who has just finished a thorough revision and collation of the Manuscript, says of this point:—'cheaiss'. This word has been written over in the original, and I am inclined to think that it was first cheinse (probably of the cheaiss) and then corrected to "cheaiss" to make a clearer entry. At present it can be read either way.' One is tempted to conjecture the use to which the items were put. Mr. Keith Murray's parenthesis seems to suggest that they were for the chaise. It could not possibly be cheese. Nor, knowing the limitations of such wheeled vehicles as existed then, could one readily admit that chaises or a coach of any kind were known in the district. Horse traffic alone—'sadle tackits, pair of creels, horse hair'—is ever mentioned. Nor are chains an obvious feature in a chaise. But the clock is more than once referred to. Within a week of this date there is the charge, 'for the fraught of the clock.' I know of nothing else in the text to which the items could be referred. To follow out this hazarded conjecture to the application of these, at first sight somewhat incongruous, medicaments to a clock, would be both futile and of no essential importance. My clock guess must be taken as it strikes the reader.

Cockie-leekie, p. 6. See Introduction, p. xlivi. Fr. coquelicot.

Cuschinell, p. 24. Cochineal.

Dabs, p. 45. Salt-water flounder. Inhabits deeper water than the flounder, and does not enter river mouths; the little plaice.

Dads and blads, p. 8. Probably pronounced dawds an' blaeds (Ger. Blätter). A dish of scraps stewed with curly greens or kaell. Dad, a large piece, a blow.—Halliwell. 'Leaves of greens boiled whole' (hence probably dads or lumps), 'in a sort of broth'—Jameison.

Draught (cows), p. 5. In cookery, the entrails of an animal drawn out; obs. or dial.

Dulse, p. 25. See Introduction, p. xxxviii. It played a part in Columban monastic life: 'At times plucking duilisc from the rocks.'—'Hymn of Columba.'

Feltefers, p. 119: nearest form in New Philol. Dict., feldefer. O. Eng. feldefare = field-goer. See Introduction, p. xxxiii.

256 OCHTERTYRE HOUSE BOOKE OF ACCOMPS

Foull, gooseberry, p. 54. A mixture of gooseberries scalded, pounded, sweetened and mixed with cream. Fr. fouler, to press.

Foumirt, p. 226, the foul-marten or pole-cat, a great pest before the keepers made war upon him.

Fraze, pp. 13, 53. Fr. fraise. Here the pluck (heart, liver, lungs) of a calf. Fr. fraise de veau. ‘The French fraise is apparently a transferred use of the earlier fraise, mesentery of a calf.’—New Philol. Dict. Also froise, perhaps O. Fr. for broken. Lat. fractus. ‘Provincial English, pancake with bacon in it.’—Cent. Dict.

Fretters, p. 15. Anything encased in a covering of batter or eggs and fried.

Fricasied, p. 6. Fr. fricassée, chickens cut in pieces in a white sauce.

Giblets, entrails, etc. of a goose, removed before roasting. See Introduction, p. xlivi.

Griskines, p. 5. Lean part of loin of a bacon pig: grice, gris, a young pig; very general over the Lowlands and one of the oldest Indo.-Europ. words.

Hags, p. 67; hagas, 68; haggis. Fr. hachis, a hash. Kitchiner—Cook's Oracle (1829)—‘Haggis—mince the draught and a pretty large piece of beef very small.’

Hodgepodge, p. 58; hotch-potch. Fr. hocher, to shake (cp. hotching in ‘Tam O’Shanter’) and pot.

Holland, hollund (sand), p. 186. An explanation is offered in the Introduction, p. li. The following alternative one seems less plausible. As holyn, holene is old Scots for the holly, from the inner bark of which bird-lime is made, this fine sand may have been used by the fowler to remove the viscid mass from the feet and plumage of the small birds, when caught.

Kieling, p. 168. A kind of small cod of which stockfish (sun-dried) is made.

Lippy, p. 7, fourth of a peck, same as forpet, or fourth part. The ladle in the ladle dues, which one meets with so often in burgh history, was, by Act of 1661, the fourth of a peck.

Lock (stock), p. 73. A wooden lock. ‘For thre stok lokkis to the dungeon in the castell of Blaknes.’—Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer, 1541.

Lure, p. 7. Udder of a cow, and other animals, used as food. Mrs. Beeton gives a recipe for ‘boiled calf’s udder for French forcemeats.’ It is also used in ‘veal quenelles.’ Obsolete except Sc. See Introduction, p. xlivi.

Marinated (pigs), p. 179. (Ital. marinato.) A brine containing wine and spices, for enriching the flavour of meat and fish: verb, to prepare by use of marinade. ‘Marinade, pickled meat, either flesh or fish.’—E. Phillips, 1706—in Cent. Dict.

Megur (soop), p. 34. Fr. maigre, thin. ‘Soop meegur’ was made without meat, and familiarly known as ‘berrifit keall.’

Mortor (brass to), p. 36. A large trough in which stuff is pounded small. ‘No cookery can be perfectly performed without its aid. Invaluable for preparing forcemeats.’—Mrs. Beeton.

Neat's feet, p. 6. Feet of cow or ox. O. Eng. cattle, Sc. nowt. Cp. ‘As proper a man as ever trod on neat's leather.’—Merchant of Venice.

Partons, p. 2. Sea-crabs.

Penner, p. 42. Pennart, metal cylinder with hinged lid for keeping pens and penholders, pencils, etc.; a pen-case; translates calamar, in Hollyband's Dictionary, 1593.

Pettitoes, p. 129. Pig's feet.

Picke, p. 47. Pike. Same word as pick, peck, beak; Scots name, the ged (cp. goad), both from the sharp snout.

Pluck (oxe), p. 39. Heart, liver and lungs. See Introduction, p. xlivi.

Poor (man), p. 245. ‘A poor man of mutton’ is a dish made of the remains of the shoulder, boiled bones.—Jamieson.

Pouts rost, p. 71. Seventeenth century and O.-Eng. name for the moorhen, or grey hen. Claverhouse, Sir John Clerk, and Foulis of Ravelstoun all write of pouting. (Fr. poulet, Lat. pulla, a hen; Sc. pout, a chicken.) ‘A young bird. Fasanello, a pheasant pout. Floris.’—Halliwell-Phillips.

Ragowd, p. 181. Fr. ragoût. Stewed and highly seasoned meat.

Ramikines of chesse, p. 143. A dish made of eggs, cheese, and crumbs of bread mixed in the manner of a pudding.—Jamieson. Fr. ramequin, sort of pastry made with cheese; toast and cheese; bread-crumbs baked in a pie-pan with a farce of cheese, eggs, etc.—E. Phillips, 1706, in Cent. Dict.

Ranges, p. 118. A sort of brush made of twigs of heather, tied together and trimmed, for cleaning pots. Generally called a reenge, from rinse (cp. Ger. rein, pure).

Ruber (wassing), p. 21. Probably a wooden board, ribbed cross-wise, used to help the hands in washing the clothes.

Sallad magundy, p. 1. Salmagundi, a seasoned hodge-podge or mixture. Ital. salame, salt meat, and condito, seasoned.

Sallibubs, p. 55. A mixture of wine with milk and sugar. Mrs. Beeton gives a recipe for it.

Savones, p. 222. Clerical error for savoys, a well-known variety of cabbage.

258 OCHTERTYRE HOUSE BOOKE OF ACCOMPS

Say (fore), p. 65. Term used by the cook and the butcher for the cut immediately behind the shoulder. The dressmaker calls the opening at the arm-pit in a dress-body the say (pron. sie). In Century, p. 4, under, 'say,' full account of syde in 'a syde gown,' common in Scots. M.E. saye, a kind of serge. Sp. saya, wide coat, loose dress tunic. Ital. sajo. Lat. sagum, woollen blanket. Gr. σάγος, coarse cloak. In sixteenth century a cloth for outer garments.

Scollopt oysters, p. 3. A sentence in Mrs. Beeton's Household Management explains: 'Have ready the scallop-shells buttered,' etc., etc.

Scorch-anarrow, p. 143; scorchenarrow, pp. 147, 151. See Introduction, p. xl. Its use as an antidote to snake bite may have arisen from the snake-like appearance of the root. As an esculent it used to be much more commonly grown in Scotland than it is now. The late Mr. John Scott, C.B., of Halkhill told me he grew it in his garden.

Skerrit. See Introduction, p. xl.

Skink, p. 6. Shin or shank bone of beef; soup made with it or other sinewy portion. See Introduction, p. xlvi.

Smelts. See Spirlines.

Sodwell—cream de sodwell, p. 180. I have had to travel far to get on the track of sodwell. In the Laws of the Four Burghs, and there, under 'Custom of Merchandise,' are these dutiable goods:—balys of peper, coymn, alom, gynger, setwell, etc. As these Laws are among the oldest of Scots records, the entry in the House Booke, in the light of this list, bears remarkable testimony to the continuity and persistence of the language. Setwell is the name applied to the rootstocks of plants of the genus Curcuma. They are aromatic, pungent, bitter, tonic; and are used as ginger is, to which the plant is closely akin. It is a native of India and China. The dictionaries call it zedoary, from French zédoire, but setwell, sodwell, is nearer to the original, the Persian zedwár, for r and l readily interchange.

Sour cakes, p. 8. Baked with great ceremony for St. Luke's Fair at Rutherglen (3rd Mon. of Oct. O.S.). Ure's account (History of Rutherglen) is a curious bit of folk-lore (p. 94). The cakes were made of oatmeal dough laid up in a vessel till it fermented. His recipe for Sour Cream (p. 97) is: Sour milk put into a wooden vat in a warm place, covered with a linen cloth, and allowed to ferment. The whey in time rises, when it is drawn off. What remains is switched with a spoon till the oily parts are properly mixed. Sweet milk may be added to correct the acidity. Sold in Glasgow at 4d. a Scots pint.

Spirlines, p. 4, sparlings. Ger. Spierling, a smelt. A small, silvery white fish of the salmon kind, 4 to 8 inches long. In fresh water for spawning, Aug. to May; rarely ventures far from shore; plentiful in Nov., Dec., Jan. See Introduction, p. xxxvii.

Stock lock, p. 73. See Lock.

Stoved, p. 46, stewed. 'Stovies,' potatoes stewed fine with dripping or fat bacon, onions, and spice, and served hot made supper a bright spot in the long winter evenings. As a substitute in text, p. 147—

'A stove foulis in it'; stove=stovie.

Taminy, p. 77. A kind of coarse, thin, woollen cloth—6 yds. for 6s. in the House Booke. Lat. stamen, the warp in the upright loom. Gr. ιότρος. Hence threads or cloth made of threads. In Papers of an Old Scots Family, temming occurs (1641). Cp. Tammany Hall in New York.

Tansy. A dish very common in the seventeenth century. Recipe in A True Gentlewoman's Delight, 1676, quoted Halliwell-Phillips. See Introduction, p. xlili. Tunzie. Tall, old-fashioned garden herb, bitter, aromatic, and medicinal; akin to and flowering like ragwort. 'The tansy knowe.'—Gentle Shepherd.

Wasshing ruber, p. 21. See Ruber.

Wating (cherry), p. 80. Seems to be modified from walting or welting through the very common elision of l. Welt or walt is Celtic (Gael. balt, a border), and means to hem or put on an edging, fringe, border, etc. 'For haf aue elne grene welvot to walt the Kingis grace cassok.'—Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer, 1538.

White (buttered), wheat, p. 14. Pudding of, p. 25; grinding of, p. 30.

White iron, p. 42. Thin sheet-iron coated with tin.
